THE CONVERSATION OF INVILLIAMS.

The speech of J. J. Ingalls, in the Senate, Jan. 13th, while it contains the characteristic show of rhetoric and bears the evidence of careful preparation, it is stamped by the speaker's individuality, and, in the language of street parlance, exhibits more "chuck" than any previous speech of his which controls the most exciting questions of the day, and all politicians known to our language, poor old, dim-witted Ingalls! six months ago he could vote and labor in the interest of combined capital, and say that the golden rule had no place in politics—the people be d—d; now he stands up and harps scatting alterations at the close of his speech, trying to gather after the fact of the dead horse, by giving them of their oppression, as if he had just discovered it. Fortunately the people had discovered it long ago. No man makes such a radical change in his principles without a cause, and Mr. Ingalls and his brethren can never show another cause for his conversion but that of necessity. He has been compelled to stand "in" with his constituency. The old crew will not work. The oppressed workingmen of this State had denounced him and a change of tactics was all that promised him a hope. But the people who denounced him are too clever-headed to see the real situation in this way. They are the hypocrites. He denounces the manufacturers that he has labored for so faithfully as "men of no politics or of any politics." Of course every know what politics the monopolists advocate, and they are unchangeable.

It is worthy of notice that much as he writes, he does not seem to perceive methods of the North, he does not let it without giving a passing blow at the South, his favorite target at which to discharge his poison and filth. He denominates the November election as "neither a Republican defeat or a Democratic victory." It matters little what he is pleased to call it. The Democrats are still here, and the Republicans are as bad as ever. "And Nero did little while Rome burned," says the new convert, and he has been on the filling committee for eighteen years. It is too late now for Ingalls to defend himself in favor of the dear people. After the greater part of his life has been spent battling their interests, they will not let him go. He is a scoundrel. That g. o. r. is doomed, is obvious, and many a man, like Ingalls, will make some unexpected step to have his name go down to history as the author of a great effort to save his party.

As Senator Ingalls goes off on tour, it is remembered that he was elected to his position eighteen years ago over S. C. Pomeroy, a man who opposed him with money. The exposure in the Legislature of the alleged use of $7,000 by Pomeroy in buying votes, gave Ingalls heart. This incident, with Mr. Tracy, has given the country a better idea of the Gilded Age, that worth keeping in mind. Percy Board, who has been confined to his home by illness for several days is out again.

Mr. J. H. Neff has left the Rosetta mill to take charge of a mill in Garrettsville. This leaves the Rosetta mill without a miller. Any person desiring to buy or rent would do well to communicate with Mr. W. Y. Haslin.

The Court Wrestles With Their Jail Contract—The Matter in a Considerable Wind.

Quite a bustle has got up in the county court last Monday when the question of building the new jail came up for consideration.

The court decided to let the job to two firms on the ground offering bids.

Mr. McDonald, of Louisville, and Mr. Landrum, of Hambleton, represent the Pandy Jail Building and Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis. The latter firm are steel jail builders, and could not get a competing bid with McDonald Bros., they claimed because they were beaten by the bid of the former.

One bid was given by the latter firm, and that was so high that the court adjourned by the time set to let the contract, that their orders were confined to the building of a stone jail. It seems that the first intention of the court was to build a stone jail, as a reference to the orders in respect to the matter made last November will show. The first step taken was the sending of a copy of the order to the office of Messrs. O. M. and Matthias Miller, D. H. Severs and Morris Eskridge, who were directed to report the kind of a jail they deemed necessary and the probable cost of same. This committee conferred with Mr. McDonald, who was here, and who had previously exhibited to the court his plans for a stone jail, and recommended the building of a stone jail with eight cells and jailor's residence attached. The report of the committee sets out the plans, specifications, etc., and is rather too voluminous to reproduce here; but it recommended that a stone jail was the character of structure desired.

After the committee had advised the court and ordered them to advertise for bids for building a stone jail without reference to any other character of building.

When the committee had advertised for bids for the Pandy Jail Works, of St. Louis, sent their agent here to put in a bid; but when he got here and went before the court, he said, "I am not here to bid; I am here to advise the court that I will not consider entering his bid from the fact that under previous action by the court they were to contract for a jail to be built of stone."

The committee then recognized the hampered situation in which they were placed, but followed instructions.

The report Monday was a long one, and when they filed it with the court, Mr. McDonald brought with him the approval of the court, for a stone jail, to cost $1,725. When the report was read and submitted for the court's rejection or approval, Mr. Landrum arose and asked the court to set aside their action before the court, requiring that their jail be built of stone and allow all jail buildings in the country to lay in bids. He claimed that he could build one of steel at a saving of seven hundred dollars less to the county than the price contracted with McDonald Bros. Mr. Landrum's remarks brought forth various remarks, and with the exception of Mr. McDonald, he was in favor of allowing all bids.

There was a strong argument for fairness and candor with the committee, and contend that stone jails were equal to any in the world for durability and safety. He said his prices were reasonable, and was only asking a fair price for what he was doing.

But there was a disposition on the part of many to believe, after hearing the statements of all concerned, that the court had gotten themselves into a pretty tight place by confining the contract to a stone jail and thus giving McDonald Bros. an advantage over the Pandy's fairness and honesty for construction, etc. The mistake was in not making the bids so as to embrace all competitors. This was the sole question agitating the mind of the court when they adjourned Monday evening at 5 o'clock, having wrestled with the best part of the day without any final action.

By Telephone to the News.

Hannibal, Jan. 20.—The court met to-day and after considerable wrangling over the jail question, decided to accept McDonald's report, and to let the job to him for $1,725, the report, but afterwards reconsidered. The railroad tax was also levied at 60 cents on the $100 worth of property.

A Brilliant Wedding.

The immediate relatives and a few friends assembled at the hospital home of Mr. and Mrs. James Fairleigh, Thursday, Jan. 14th, at 4 p.m., to witness the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mary Allan, to Hon. Chapelle Wathen. The ceremony was performed by Father O'Connor, and the bridegroom was represented by his brother, Mr. James Wathen.

Many friends attended, and all then adjourned to the residence of the bridegroom, where the wedding feast was held.

BRECKENRIDGE NEWS.

REMINISCENCES.

BY AN OLD-TIMER.

NO. VII.

Since the publication in regard to flat-boating, a communication has been received from Mrs. Rachel Witt, of Stephensport, relating to a trip made by her grandfather, Henry Hardin, at a period antedating that of which we write. In 1816 he had a team of two bony horses, using a whipson in getting the timber. The cargo consisted of can, pork, lard, meat, chickens and a few horses, one of which he was to ride back home.

With this load he started from the mouth of Shaking Creek (now town at that time), having only one man to accompany him, and that man was so frightened at the sight of the turbulent Mississippi river that he declined to go further. His boat was of course a very small one, but floated safely to its destination, and after disposing of his load, with foot or oar on foot, they made their way back as best they could through almost trackless swamps and forests, passing through what was then the Indian nations.

Of course he was glad, after such a trip, to get home again, and his faithful wife, when nearing the place, manifested such anxiety for his safety, that she reluctantly let him go. But it is remarkable how little he thought about the house for his tired mother, one that he will reflect on with many a remorseful regret, when that mother shall have finished her ministrations for her boy, of which she was so proud, and gone to her reward.

Boys. Help Your Mother.

It is very often remarked of big boys,

"I know that boy will make a kind husband, he is so good to his mother," and, "vice versa." The mischievous idea that boys sometimes have, that little boys shores about the house for his tired mother, is one that he will reflect on with many a remorseful regret, when that mother shall have finished her ministrations for her boy, of which she was so proud, and gone to her reward.

We are sorry, too, to be compelled from our own stand-point to believe in him, that in this case, that lack of assistance is more attributable to the father than to the boy. Boys as a general rule, when they get to the age of 14 or 15 years, seem to somewhat grow away from their mother, and take more of their lessons out of their father's book, and if the pages of that father's book are filled with the useful, and the important, he should be allowed to go so far. But if that father teaches his boy that he will never be a man so long as he "judges," as he calls it, about the house, and helps his mother, he is simply giving him a club to break his own head with. It never injured the business capacities of any man or boy to make himself useful, and whatever his hand sees to do, do it willingly.

Rev. H. M. Ford. Late Preaching Elder of this District, in Trouble.

An interesting church trial will take place at Cincinnati on the 20th of this month. The Rev. H. M. Ford was Presiding Elder there a year ago, and while there, was a good deal of gossip about the way he conducted his business affairs.

At the conference last October, he committed himself to investigate the charges against him. This committee will meet on the 20th.

It is said that the charges are very grave, including borrowing money without any hope of repaying it, and obtaining to bank paper by which he could not be found adequate to such under-takings.

Recalling, however, to the times and things which came under the writer's personal observation, it may be said that few changes occurred for several years in the general aspect of affairs in town. The school system and the movement was going on in some respects; more interest was being manifested in schools, which had been neglected, especially in the country, and the necessity for better buildings and more competent teachers was being discussed.

In the meantime a convention for altering or amending the constitution of the State had been called to meet in 1840. Col. David R. Murray, whose pronounced opposition to making the offices of the State elective, especially the judiciary, was announced as a candidate for the position of delegate, while Mr. Smith, who as a member of the Legislature had been a leader in opposing the convention, also became a candidate, favoring strongly the election of all officers by the people. Henry Washington, a prominent citizen of the county, also announced himself a candidate upon the Smith platform. Shortly afterward the California fever, originating in 1848, developed in this country, and on the 1st of April, 1850, the miners, with two numbers added of Washington, started for the golden shore, leaving the race to the other two candidates. These gentlemen avenged the county thoroughly. The result was a victory by the people in favor of the position taken by Henry Washington, and although the evils predicted in consequence of so radical a change in the government the convention were not realized to the extent feared by some, there are still many who question the wisdom of the policy pursued in regard thereto.

And yet a majority of the people will always vote for the largest liberty, and the present convention will make this possible. There are a few exceptions, of course, of the "right of executive" now appointed by him. The popular cry of "government for the people and by the people," so contradistinguished from that of the perpetuation of party and protecting monopolies is regarded as essential to the best interests of the masses and to the security of their liberties.

Henry Washington died after the constitution had been formed and submitted to a vote of the people, and Daniel J. Stephens was elected to succeed him, and upon the assembling of the convention for the purpose, signed the constitution.

The following were the first officers elected under the present constitution: Circuit Judge, Jesse W. Kincheloe; County Judge, Williamson Cox; Circuit and County Court Clerk, Joe Allen; Commonwealth's Attorney, Alf Allen; County Attorney, S. C. Chalifant; Sheriff, G. P. Dolly. John B. Briner was the first county representative, succeeded by J. H. Thomas.

The departure of Joe Smith for California was followed three weeks later, say April 20, 1849, by five young men from the Mt. Zion neighborhood—Jas. H. Mooreman, a recent citizen of Cloverport; Jas. W. Moorman, son of F. G. Moorman; Richard S. Skinner, son of Abram Skinner, New Albany; Jas. A. Alexander, the latter now a citizen of Oakland, Cal. This party went by boat to Independence, Mo., and from thence took the overland route via South Pass, the "Fremont trail," and overhauling Smith, reached the Sacramento valley in just six months from the time they left Independence. This was the first party from this section of the country and spent two being under twenty-one years old. They found game plentiful along the route, buffalo, bear, deer and smaller game; also some Indians, by whom they were once attacked.

A Grateful Pastor.

I wish to thank the members of my church, through the News, for the many nice presents during the holidays, such as slippers, collar and cuff link, handkerchiefs, pocket knife, vest, etc.

I assure them that the thanks of their pastor have been earned as much as he is possible for the overcast to warn his flock.

I am thankful for all these, but much more for the love and esteem that prompted the gifts. The reminders of love and confidence will cheer him in the dark hours of another year's labor among this people. As soon as I have the leisure I will give in the News a statement of the work done this year.
